

LADY MARIYANE DE GERR

Lady Mariyane De Gerr

Lady Mariyane De Gerr, 18, is a beautiful young noblewoman (Com 18) and the sole heir of the De Gerr family treasures. Born in 702 on Bazine Manor on the Olokand Gardiren road, Mariyane was the only child of Sir Kivan De Gerr, Bailiff of Bazine, and his second wife Gertrine. The violet-eyed Mariyane never knew her mother, who died in childbirth, but she did weather a string of her father's wives (2) and mistresses (9) in his pursuit of a male heir.

Yet, despite the turnover of other women in her father's life, Mariyane was never really displaced, either in her father's affections or as the lady of the house in the eyes of the various visitors. And Bazine had its visitors; while only three miles from Olokand, and the site of the road's toll, it is both the last and only manor on the road to the Meselynshire salt mines and the last manor for 14 difficult miles until Cellabe on the way to Gardiren. Many a noble would stay at the manor rather than travel to the less hospitable Cellabe, including, notably, Sir Kivan's liege, Maldan Harabor, Sheriff of Meselynshire and eldest bastard son of King Miginath.

However, the situation changed dramatically in the summer of 717 when Sir Kivan died suddenly. Mariyane was still in her minority, and so she was unable to take over as Bailiff. Instead, the dislikeable but effective knight Boan of Gutterel was appointed – much to everyone's dismay, although Mariyane was allowed to stay in residence.

The situation has persisted to this day, with Boan desperate to take Mariyane as his wife, and Mariyane steadfastly refusing. Now though, with Mariyane approaching her eighteenth birthday, Boan is getting evermore frantic both for the profitable posting he may lose, and the woman he desires. Luckily, the eminently eligible beauty does have some support on this from Maldan, and the travellers who stop at Balzain for the manor's hospitality.
