Sir Robert De Lousen

Sir Robert De Lousen, 31, is somewhat of a latecomer to the ranks of the peerage. Born on the King's riverside manor of Loxton in Kaldor, near the Royal Castle of Olokand, Robert was the eldest of three children born to Roban, a successful riverboat pilot, and his wife Lisette.

Robert's happy-go-lucky early days were spent learning some of the river's crafts, but due to the frequent absences of his father, he also spent a lot of time pursuing other activities. Luckily, the bailiff of Loxton was a man of letters, and he saw to it that young Robert's youthful energies were channelled into productive activities, and he soon discovered that as well as being a strong ambidextrous athlete, the young lad had an excellent ability at the learned arts and a companionable disposition.

When Robert reached the age of twelve, the bailiff, Hough of Martre, suggested to Roban that he, Hough, see if he could get the young lad esquired. Enquiries were made, and the young lad was sent of to Esenor for training.

By chance, a couple of months after his eighteenth birthday, Robert was squiring for the King's hunting party near the Malvern Forest. When brigands made to attack the group, a keen-eyed Robert spotted three quivering haystacks and so espied he ambush, and the villains were routed. To thank the squire, King Miganath instructed that Robert complete his training at Olokand. A few years later, on 21 Nuzyael, 710 – Robert's twenty first birthday – he was knighted by the King himself.

As the son of a riverboat pilot, the still single Sir Robert didn't have a manor to inherit, so he has spent his time travelling the jousting circuit and seeking adventure until some likely opportunity comes along. Secretly, he hopes one day to take over as the bailiff of Loxton, but this poriomaniac is in no hurry, happy instead to travel, and to help those in need.
